SYNOPSIS OF THE EXPERT TALK

ON

"Energy conservation, building code and its significance in sustainable growth"

Concept Energy conservation building code is introduced in energy conservation act 2001. It fixes guide lines, so that energy consumption of building will be reduced. Today buildings consume nearly 30% of total energy, out of which more than 40% is used for heating & cooling needs.

Depending on type of building and geographical location, ECBC mandates standard guidelines. It mainly focus on building envelope structure design, HVAC, Electrical and use of renewable energy.

There are compulsory and prescriptive guide lines to make building energy efficient. Simulation tools and other software's are available to make design simpler in order to comply with ECBC.

Presently it is applicable to building with contract demand of 100kw or 125kva.It provides ample growth opportunity for civil, electrical, mechanical, electronics and automation engineers.
